NO. 002 THE FORMAT

An arena event. Not a film.

No one in the building knows how it ends.

Impossible Fights is a new live-event format. Two fighters, restored to their primes, meet in front of a full arena — the walkouts, the corners, the announcer, the bell. The crowd is real. The night is real. The fight is impossible.

Dozens of endings are filmed for every bout. The knockout in the second. The war that goes the distance. The comeback off the canvas. On fight night one of them happens, and nobody in the building knows which — not the crowd, not the crew, not the arena staff. A film has an ending. A fight has a result.

NO. 004 THE MODEL

Every fight night pays seven ways.

Fight-night economics on the Voyage engine.

Fight-night pricing. Film economics.

The one-show model has a total capitalization of approximately $375M, structured 50% equity / 50% debt.

OPERATING ASSUMPTIONS

- 01 3,000-seat purpose-built venue
- 02 One fight format. 9 shows per week, 50 weeks per year
- 03 $125 average ticket price
- 04 80% modeled occupancy

PROJECTED RETURNS

- $135M Year 1 ticket revenue
- 45% Cash-on-cash return, Year 1
- $445M Total 5-year distributable cash flow
- ~37% Capital IRR on operating cash flows

All figures are based on one show and exclude sponsorship, advertising, and signage revenue entirely. Cost estimates are intentionally conservative.

One platform on top. Hard assets underneath.

TopCo owns the vision. The hard assets live in asset-specific vehicles — and each investor type gets the right risk and return.

TopCo is the engine. Every vehicle beneath it is a deal the platform originated and governs — so real-estate capital can hold the arena, rights capital can hold the library, and event capital can back a single night.
